Bob Herbert, columns, "Day of Humiliation", 8 March 1998; "The sight of a police officer," New York Times, March 15, 1998. The meeting was captured on the video, forcing officials to recognize that police behavior was "apparent". 13 But, even if more than 120 civil complaints were filed about the incident, the CCRB of the police department faced great difficulty in prosecuting charges against the agents involved because it was met with a wall of silence. The officers seemingly raided the wrong apartments and humiliated their occupants using racial epithets and dressed a man in female clothing before taking him to a station house and, in another case, handcuffing a woman who was eight months pregnant and only partially dressed; was so scared by the experience that reported urination, but the officers did not allow her to put on dry clothes for two hours. He also described the link between corruption and brutality, and urged a plan to fight both problems. Journal of Police Science and Administration 6(3): 264-72. Armstrong, Michael F. Kappeler, V.
